Justice

Program Overview

NorQuest College's Justice diploma program is an interdisciplinary program that allows students to gain skills and knowledge for a wide variety of Justice-related professions and further educational opportunities. It is a unique offering in the Edmonton region and in Alberta. The program offers broad education in the justice field that can lead directly to a career as well as university transfer courses for laddering opportunities to university. Students will select from a variety of electives in areas such as diversity and inclusion, Indigenous justice, youth work, and criminal justice studies.

Career Potential

While policing and corrections are highly desirable occupations, the skills taught in this program would allow graduates to work in a variety of roles covering a wide spectrum of employment opportunities. There are many careers that a graduate of the Justice diploma program can pursue and many of these would be direct entry with a two-year diploma. Graduates with a two-year diploma can pursue positions in justice-related fields such as protective services and security; peace officers; case workers and community resources; police clerks and emergency services; and legal services.
